

The Draping Class with Julien Cristofoli

Baltimore, Maryland April 27-30 and May 1-4, 2011

San Diego (Vista), California October 5-8 and October 9-12, 2011

Julien Cristofoli, master of the French art of the moulage—in which fabric is draped directly on the dress form to create patterns—will be offering seminars in Baltimore and San Diego in 2011.

Each 4-day class will follow the same format:

Day 1

The first day will be spent preparing the dress form by applying the bolduc (narrow twill tape, which Julien will bring from Paris) to it. A detailed and precise series of permanent reference lines are applied. Later, coordinating reference lines drawn on muslin are superimposed on the dress form and the manipulation begins.

Day 2

The second day, Julien will demonstrate the draping of two skirts, and students will do the same on their own dress forms.

Day 3

The third day, the process is the same, but with two tops.

Day 4

The fourth day will be spent perfecting your patterns.

You'll see that at each location there is a pair of classes. The format for both classes is the same. However, different patterns will be presented in each class. Therefore, taking both classes (4 days plus 4 days, for a total of 8 days) will offer a wonderful reinforcement of your knowledge, and you'll leave with a full range of patterns (4 skirts and 4 tops).

The patterns Julien has chosen will, between them, teach students a wide range of basic draping techniques.

A supply list will be sent out well in advance of the class.

Each student will need a sturdy dress form; dress forms can be shipped to and from the locations in which the classes will be held.

Susan Khalje will assist Julien during the seminars.
